TEACHING RESPONSIBILITIES

Undergraduate: Social Psychology

This large lecture course with an enrollment of 120 undergraduates is a Psychology major requirement. The course is designed to introduce students to social psychological theories and research. Students attend lectures that integrate both contemporary and classical work in social psychology. Students are evaluated with 3 exams through the course of the semester.

Undergraduate: Psychology of Women

This course, with an enrollment of 50 undergraduates, is an upper level seminar designed to provide undergraduates with an in-depth look at gender related issues in psychology. The ultimate goal of the course is to provide students with a comprehensive background in the psychology of women and gender as well as to prepare students to design a psychological study on the topic of gender and present their ideas to the class. This presentation was graded at various stages throughout the semester. Students were also evaluated with two exams during the course of the semester.

Undergraduate: Advanced Topics in Stereotyping and Prejudice

This course, with an enrollment of 40 undergraduates, is an upper level seminar designed to provide undergraduates with an in-depth look at stereotyping and prejudice research and theory. The ultimate goal of the course is to provide students with a comprehensive background in the psychology of intergroup relations and prejudice as well as to teach students presentation and scientific research comprehension skills. Students conduct weekly presentations, group papers and final projects.

Graduate: Self and Intergroup Relations

This graduate seminar course (with an average enrollment of 12) fulfills a core social psychology graduate requirement. The course is designed to give students a firm foundation in contemporary self and intergroup relations theories and research. Students read peer-reviewed research articles and guide discussions that integrate course material. Students are evaluated by their participation in class, performance as discussion leaders, and their final research proposal.
